Any place, any system: Nextrade – the digital ordering platform – celebrates the go-live of its pilot version at the opening of Tendence 2019. Over 40 suppliers with more than 60,000 articles have already set up their B2B shops on the platform.

The pilot version of Nextrade, the digital marketplace for the consumer goods industry in the B2B sector, is now online. It is due to go live for retailers in the coming weeks. Suppliers using the system include brands already in the nmedia portfolio, such as Asa, Blomus, Gefu, Koziol, Leonardo and Robbe & Berking, as well as many well-known new customers – with major players such as Berghoff, Butlers, Gilde, Hoff, Kaheku, Städter and Wenko also onboard. “Since announcing Nextrade in February 2019, this launch is the first major milestone in establishing a central ordering platform for the German and international Home & Living sector. Within just a few months, and thanks to close cooperation with our shareholders, we have already convinced a large number of existing and new customers to join Nextrade and actively integrated them into our system. With 60,000 articles currently available in the system, we are well on track – and that within just three months of starting the project”, says Nicolaus Gedat, CEO of nmedia, market leader in the EDI Home & Living sector.

Year-round forum for retailers and suppliers

Messe Frankfurt is a strong marketing partner for national and international sales. With this platform, the largest player in the German trade fair industry is launching a format that creates new channels for matching supply and demand at a time of enormous consolidation in the retail sector. For retailers, it eliminates the need to manually place orders with individual suppliers – saving time, money and resources. “Digital alternatives offer users even greater freedom to dedicate their trade fair meetings to developing strong networks and identifying new products that enhance their product range. Extending the window for time-consuming order processes to any time of the day or night is extremely helpful here. The launch of this platform makes us the first trade fair organiser to tap this potential and we are working together with strong partners to shape the digital transformation of the industry,” says Philipp Ferger, Group Show Director of Tendence and Nordstil, and Managing Director of nmedia.

Suppliers: Unique look & feel on a standard platform

Each supplier is free to design their own shop to reflect the look & feel of their brand with independent rights management and price setting – including upload of product images, videos, product descriptions and other marketing documents. “With Nextrade, we have finally found the concept that enables us to use the opportunities of digitisation for our brand”, says Oliver Kleine, Managing Director of Leonardo. In addition, the marketplace can integrate trading partners who are difficult to contact via trade fairs or distribution partners. “Nextrade is making our world more integrated. The platform is a great opportunity for our brand”, says Philip C. Köllner, Managing Director of the manufacturer Wenko, which operates in the bathroom, kitchen, laundry and living sector. By setting up their own brand shop, suppliers can also integrate retailers via a central interface and organise pooled sales for greater efficiency and lower costs with just a few clicks. “We needed to find a faster way to present our innovations at the POS – Nextrade is the solution,” says Florian Berger, owner of Donkey Products.

The pilot version can be tested on all three days of Tendence from 29 June to 1 July 2019 in Hall 8.0 at Stand D10:
